CONTENTS

Preface vii

Introduction: Protestantism and Labor Reform Movements 1

1. A City of Industrial and Religious Extremes 21

2. Opening Eight-Hour Protests and the 1867 Eight-Hour Law 43

3. Eight Hours and the Financial Crisis of 1873 71

4. Marching to Haymarket and the 1886 Eight-Hour Campaign 91

5. A “New Consciousness” for Constructing a Morality of Leisure 117

6. Shifting Eight-Hour Reform from Consciousness to Creed in the Twentieth Century 155

Conclusion: Religion and the Trajectory of Labor Reform Movements 193

Notes 209

References 211

Index 225