Jazz Internationalism

Literary Afro-Modernism and the Cultural Politics of Black Music

JOHN LOWNEY

A bold reconsideration of jazz’s influence in Afro-modernist literature. Ranging from the New Negro Renaissance through the social movements of the 1960s, this new history of Afro-modernist jazz writing examines how Claude McKay, Ann Petry, Langston Hughes, and many other writers employed jazz as both a critical social discourse and mode of artistic expression.

Archibald Motley Jr. and Racial Reinvention

The Old Negro in New Negro Art

PHOEBE WOLFSKILL

“A satisfyingly inquisitive foray into the complications of an African American artist grappling with his own uneasy relationship to matters of race, gender, class, culture, and modernism. Wolfskill provides a welcomed critical probing and less romanticized account of the Harlem Renaissance.”

—James Smallis, author of Homosexuality in Art

Slavery at Sea
Terror, Sex, and Sickness in the Middle Passage
SOWANDE’ M. MUSTAKEEM

“Mustakeem’s groundbreaking study . . . offers provocative new insights into how gender, health, age, illness, and medical treatment intersected with trauma and violence and transformed human beings into the world’s most commercially sought commodity for over four centuries.”
—Huffington Post

Humane Insight
Looking at Images of African American Suffering and Death
COURTNEY R. BAKER

“Asks us to set aside earlier theoretical interpretations pertaining to the camera and the violent, invasive, imperial gaze it affords . . . and instead pay attention to the power of the photographs themselves and what looking at them achieves.”—Civil War Book Review

Word Warrior
